OBJECT AND REASONS(The objects and reasons do not form part of the Bill)

The Bill for the Elections Act seeks to implement several of the recommendations of the Constitutional and Electoral Reform Committee in relation to electoral reform. The Bill addresses issues related to the administration of the Central Electoral Office, continuous registration, appeals to the High Court, voter registration cards, fixed date elections, advance polls, election offences and increasing the number of elected representatives. Overall, the Bill improves on the clarity of the existing legislation which should make administration easier.

PART 1PRELIMINARY

This part contains the definition section which outlines the meaning of key terms used in the Bill.

PART 2CENTRAL ELECTORAL OFFICE

This part provides for the setting up of the Central Electoral Office. It also outlines the key qualifications for the Supervisor of Elections and outlines the duties of the Supervisor. The appointment of registration officers, returning officers and other staff to support the Supervisor in the execution of the duties of the office. Accountability mechanisms for the funds allocated to the Central Electoral Office are built in. An obligation is imposed for the Central Electoral Office to be involved in educating the public on the electoral process.

PART 3ELECTORAL DISTRICTS

Provision is made for Anguilla to be divided into seven single member electoral districts (as currently exist) and one single island wide electoral district which will return four members to the House of Assembly. Persons who are qualified to be registered as voters but who are not registered can apply to be registered to vote.

PART 4REGISTRATION OF VOTERS

This Part outlines the process for the continuous registration of voters, which currently exists. It provides for the production of quarterly lists, the preparation of registers etc. The Supervisor of Elections is empowered to request information from householders and to require the attendance of persons to produce documentary evidence of their entitlement to vote. The procedure for transfer of registration, corrections, making objections, hearing of claims and objections, appeals etc are found in this part. It is noteworthy that provision is also made for the establishment of a voter registration database and the issuing of voter identification cards which should assist in making the voting process more efficient. Note that the lack of a voter identification card does not prevent a person from voting.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR ELECTIONS

Unless the Governor, acting on the advice of the Premier, orders otherwise, elections will be held on the first Monday after the fifth anniversary of the last general elections. In any event, general elections cannot be held more than 2 months earlier or later than the last general elections. However, this does not apply where a vote of no confidence succeeds and there is a need to call a general election early.

This Part of the Bill sets out in detail the provisions for the proper conduct of elections. The process begins with the issuing of the writ for election. This is followed by the nomination process for candidates. Provision is made for candidates to withdraw after nomination. However, if they do so after the ballots are printed, they are subject to a fine. There are also circumstances in which a candidate's deposit is forfeited or returned.

When elections are contested, there are extensive procedures which have to be followed. These include the setting up of polling stations, the appointment of poll clerks, the provision of ballot boxes and other election materials. There are also mechanisms to ensure the integrity of the process including the appointment of agents by the political party or independent candidates who are present at the polling stations. Procedures for the taking of the poll are also outlined. Voters will be given a ballot paper which will have a line separating the part of the ballot paper for the Single-member Electoral District from the single island wide electoral District. On one half of the ballot will be the list of candidates contesting the election in a particular district; and on the other half will be the list of candidates contesting the single island wide electoral district election. Voters will vote for one person in the single-member electoral district and four persons in the single island wide electoral district.

Where circumstances arise where the identity of a voter may be in question, there are provisions addressing how these are to be handled. Special provision is also made for voting for persons who are elderly, physically challenged or illiterate. The method of handling discrepancies is also outlined with emphasis placed on ensuring that no qualified person is unjustly deprived of their right to vote.

It is noteworthy that provisions are included for the taking of advance polls (not more than 3 days prior to the election) particularly for the following persons:

- a police officer, nurse, doctor, emergency medical technician;
- a person employed in the Central Electoral Office;
- an election officer;
- a person who is physically incapacitated

However, they must have a voter identification card to take advantage of this provision.

The offence of influencing voters on election day within 100 yards of the polling station has been maintained.

The steps to be taken when a poll is closed, for the counting of votes (including electronic tabulation) and completion of the election return (the official result) are also outlined in detail. At the end of the process all election material and equipment must be in the custody of the Supervisor of Elections.

PART 6 ELECTION PETITIONS

After an election result, a candidate, voter or the Attorney General can apply to the High Court in its civil jurisdiction by way of petition to contest the election result. Where it is found that a candidate or agent engaged in corrupt or illegal practices or the corrupt or illegal practices of another person influenced the election to such an extent that a candidate was unduly elected, the election of that candidate will be void and the candidate will be prohibited from contesting the new election that may be ordered by the Court.

PART 7 ELECTION OFFENCES

The Bill provides for an increase in penalties for election offences. It continues to prohibit the sale or distribution of liquor when on polling day while the poll is open (with the exception of licensed hotels or restaurants). There is also an obligation on employers to allow employees time off to vote, or otherwise face criminal penalties. Given the importance of the role of election officers and their duty to ensure the integrity of the process, penalties are imposed for deliberate acts designed to influence voters, suppress votes, interfere with ballots, infringe the voter's secrecy etc. Additionally, penalties remain for certain acts on polling day related to publication of promotional material and messages in relation to any candidate or party.

The offences of bribery, treating, undue influence and personation are maintained. It should be noted that if found guilty of these offences not only is a person liable to a fine and imprisonment, but for a period of seven (7) years they will be prohibited if a voter, from voting, and if a candidate, from contesting elections. This prohibition is similar for persons found guilty of engaging in illegal practices at elections, except that the period of prohibition in the latter case is five (5) years.

PART 8 MISCELLANEOUS

To close out the Bill there are several miscellaneous provisions. A voter is under no obligation to disclose their vote. The Register of Voters is conclusive in determining on polling day who has a right to vote. Where difficulties arise in the application of this Act, the Supervisor of Elections can issue orders to address particular situations. Regulation-making power remains with the Governor.

The Elections Act RSA c E030 will be repealed. However, the Supervisor of Elections and the Register of Voters continue as if appointed or made under this Act.
